message from the chief

2021 was a hard pandemic year. The sudden passing in November of our board Chair Rick Redmond was also a blow. We were, however, encouraged by great community support, including donations that allowed us to offer free library cards. Thank you to everyone who chose kindness during difficult times.

We continued to adjust services in 2021 to meet COVID-19 realities. Family bookings allowed small groups to use our Co-op Community Developmental Play Space and other resources, and take-home kits let people do crafts and activities at home. These were extremely popular. Curbside pickup and a new display collection allowed distanced access to collections. A new library based social worker, funded by the Medicine Hat Community Housing Society, helped hundreds of library users, many of whom would not otherwise access this kind of service.

2022 will be a year of returning to a new version of normal. We will begin ramping up to full services. This will look a bit different than in the past, adjusted to meet new public health, societal and funding realities.

Community, access, and safety are the top priorities in our Plan of Service. These priorities remain relevant. We will open up access, build community, and always stay focused on doing so in a safe and sustainable way.

The Library is a powerful community builder and there is a greater need for this than ever before. Programming brings people together. We will soon return to in-person programming with restricted attendance; we hope to return to new normal levels of programming by the fall.

We will explore new ways of connecting people. The Library is an open facility that welcomes everyone. We will seek to bring different groups and demographics together. Our meeting rooms are an important resource for groups that need space to get together. We will bring back our room rental service in 2022.
